If, If, then

Activity – Letter to Kay

Dear Kay,

My heart is heavy and my eyes are red from crying. I seem to cry more often now because I now know what sadness feels like. It feels like everything I love is taken from me. I must remain positive and keep the belief that one day I will find you.

After the raven left, the coach continued on its journey. Speedily, we travelled through the woods and across the country. As the sun set one evening, we had a terrible fright. Suddenly, from behind a clump of trees we were ambushed by a band of robbers.

Swiftly, they attacked. Within moments, screams of pain could be heard echoing around the forest. I was petrified, so I crouched inside the coach holding my breath, not daring to move. Daggers slashed, pistols fired followed by silence. Deadly silence!

Without warning, the door to the carriage opened and I was dragged kicking and screaming along the rough ground. From the corner of my eye, I caught a glimpse of the coachman and footman. They had been slaughtered like animals. Was I next? Why us? Was this planned?

An ugly old hag came up to me, waving her dagger violently through the air. Seconds later, it was pushed up against me. This was it, I thought. It was over. I closed my eyes and waited. It never came.

My rescuer was an her young daughter. Although she saved me, she had no intention of being nice. I was now her prisoner. Held against my will. If I didn't leave the palace, if I hadn't travelled alone, if we weren't ambushed, then I would be closer to finding you.
