Activity 2 - Gerda and the Crow

When she left the garden, Gerda felt optimistic. She was positive and hopeful that she would find her friend Kay. Many months had passed and early summer had turned into late autumn. Gerda knew she had wasted so much time, but felt confident in her search for Kay.

After many hours of walking barefoot through the forest, Gerda was exhausted. Sadly, she sat down on a moss covered rock and cried a river of tears. Just then, a magnificent crow approached her and looked her up and down.

The crow was quite extraordinary. He was wearing a smart, burgundy waistcoat, a mustard, wool jacket and a tall black hat. In his pockets, he had a strange collection of objects including a silver zip, a shiny, sugar spoon, and a glimmering pocket watch. As we all know, crows are collectors and this one was no exception. Confidently he hopped closer to Gerda “Good day, my lovely,” he cawed in his best human voice.
